President's Message

As your 2009 Conference President, I would like to congratulate our drivers, crew, family members, sponsors and our many Conference volunteers and officers for a terrific year of racing. We entered into this year being rather timid about the race entries, not knowing how the economic situation along with the new passport regulations would affect our race entries. Our fears were unfounded, as the race entries remained very strong through out the year.

With championships now decided and the awards banquet and partying about to begin, we still have the important business of Conference to deal with.

Your clubs are preparing now for the ICSCC Fall Meeting and banquet to be held on Nov 14 at the Seattle Marriot. It is important for you to attend your club meetings, presently being called, and provide the direction and the leadership your Executive board and Contest board representatives need.

When your Contest board rep votes in November, they vote with the strength of every licensed driver in their club. Drivers choosing to miss their Contest board meeting are conceding the power of their vote to those that do attend. Contest board reps are required to vote as instructed by their club's drivers. Every licensed driver will decide on all the rules marked "C" in the rules change package.

The other important meeting taking place in November is the E-board. The voting structure of the E-board is different from that of the Contest board, in that each member club has only one vote. Rule change proposals marked with an "E" are the responsibility of the E-board and are normally concerned with the business of Conference.

Our stewards have posted the rule change proposals on the ICSCC forum, which allows members to review the opinions of others. It should be noted that unfortunately only a small percentage of our approximately 400 licensed drivers are active on the forum.

The strength of Conference is our membership so please take your responsibility seriously and participate in the upcoming meetings.

Both Leslie and I are looking forward to seeing you at our 53rd Annual Awards Banquet, which is taking place at the Seattle Marriot. Please see separate announcement in this issue for details, and note the deadline for booking a room at the posted ICSCC rate.

Thank you again for a great year.

Kevin Skinner
2009 ICSCC President

Having Another Plan

Many of the drivers in Conference don't know that I like to ride motorcycles. I've ridden across country more than a dozen times. One of the trips was a Four Corners tour, which had me visit the four geographic corners of the continental United States: Madawaska, Maine; Key West, Florida; San Ysidro, California; and Blaine, Washington. At each town, I'd stop and take a photo of my bike at a local landmark, find a scavenger hunt clue (like the number of a pay telephone at the local breakfast cafe), get a gasoline receipt, and then mail it all back to a motorcycle club in California to be validated. The trip was about 11,000 miles, and I completed it in about seventeen days.

One of the things that I learned early on when learning to ride, and perfected in my many trips, was the idea that I need to have an alternate plan.

Say I'm driving along a local thoroughfare which occasionally has turn lanes. As I come to an intersection, I can see that a driver in oncoming traffic is in their turn lane and will turn towards their left to cross in front of me to go to a store on my right.

At this point, any of a few things can happen. I might go along my way and the driver sees me, and waits to complete their turn. The driver might not see me, and then see me at the last moment, but only after they protrude into my lane slightly. I can stop or swerve around them, depending on traffic and surface conditions, and proceed. Or, they might come out ahead of me: I'd need to stand on the brakes and stop, or swerve behind the driver, dodge oncoming mainline traffic, then swerve back. Perhaps I might make the decision to dump the bike and trust my leathers.

As I approach the driver, I can do a few things to gather information and influence my fate. I can try to make eye contact with the driver to see where they're looking. If they seem to be looking at me, maybe I'll have good luck. I can also try to see if they're on a cell phone or otherwise distracted. I can watch their car; if they're creeping ahead, maybe they don't see me – if they're at a dead stop, they probably do. I might adjust my speed, particularly if I'm worried about having reduced traction at the point where I have to make a decision about handling the motorcycle. I can check my mirrors and look behind the turning car to look for gaps in traffic.

Thing is, I need to have a few different plans of action, and I have to be willing to look for clues that will help me decide, hope fully as early as possible, what might happen in the next few seconds. I think that any motorcyclist knows it's disastrous to not have at least a couple of plans in place when approaching an on-road situation; and I would have thought all race drivers felt the same way.

While working as steward, I've grown surprised at the frequency and severity of contact in the race groups. Nearly all drivers complete races without contact, but each weekend it seems like each group has a couple reports of contact that could've been avoided. It's one of those situations where a small percentage of people cause the majority of the work.

How could so many drivers, each weekend, have such severe contact? Haven't they ever ridden motorcycles, where there's no such thing as a minor incident? Even then, haven't they realized that bending out fenders and fixing fenders is not only not fun, but no way to win a championship?

I have observed something in common among many of the explanations drivers offer to me after incidents. That theme is that the driver did (or didn't do) something and expected a certain outcome as a result, but was surprised when the outcome didn't materialize. They present that surprise to me as it is the basis for a valid excuse for the contact.

Certainly, when someone spins in front of you, you've got nowhere to go. It's hard to have a backup plan that you can execute in a few hundred milliseconds between the time the car ahead of you is gone and the time your travel brings you into contact with it. Maybe a moose jumps the fence in turn 5, and you similarly have no chance to react.

But when navigating through traffic, in a corner, it behooves a driver to have at least a couple of plans to decide what to do when the car around them doesn't do what they had initially inspected.

Just like I might try to get clues from cars in traffic when riding my motorcycle, when I'm driving my race car, I like to look at cars on course to see what they're telling me. I can tell from the attitude of the car's platform where its weight is, and judging by its changes in direction, how the driver is handling the car. If the driver points or waves me by, I still try to set up the pass safely to make sure I get around safely and while carrying my own momentum. I can look at the wheels to see if they're turning or chirping or smoking. I can look for changes in the car's attitude, too. The angle of the front wheels gives me information about what the driver is trying to make the car do, whether the car is complying or not.

Each of these observations leads to a clue that what I expected might not happen. The car I'm passing might change directions, spin, or close the door on my anticipated path. I might notice more than one car, and figure out that they're racing - and probably in a different class, where I have no business. In fact, through my own error, my own car might change directions or spin. I need to make sure my plan has room for my own mistakes, or over-estimation, or sudden mechanical failure.

If you're planning on passing, you can ask yourself a few questions to prompt those plans. What would you do if the driver turns in as you pass because he just honestly didn't see you? What would you do if the driver you're overtaking blew his engine? What if you start making the pass and the other driver misses as shift? What if you're about to tuck in front again only to find that the driver you passed nailed his exit and built a big head of steam coming at you?

When a driver tells me that "they thought that they could get by", or "didn't expect that", or "couldn't figure out why that happened"; or that the other driver didn't let them by, then I know they didn't have an adequate plan; they didn't ask themselves any of these questions. Perhaps what they expected was unrealistic, or perhaps they had a good idea and something changed but they didn't react to it or didn't execute on that plan.

We're all on track together, with varying skill levels, varying levels of competitive drive, and different cars and classes. We owe it all to one another to have multiple plans, and a desire to act on them, which gets us all around the course and back on the trailers without a scratch.

I hope you'll work on your anticipation and think about alternate plans while working your way through traffic at the next race.

2005-2009 Average per race	2.39			16.53

Remarks:

- Trends are noted using 2005 statistics as a starting point
- Novice Open Wheel was integrated into Group 6 beginning in 2008.
- Entry totals include DNFs, but not DNSs.
- Open wheel entries do not appear to follow any distinct trends relative to track location or single/double race weekend status.
- Closed wheel entries appear to follow a trend since 2005 where there are less than average NCW entries at Mission and Spokane in general, and especially on the second race of a double race weekend.
- There were a higher than average number of drivers returning to racing after a 2+ year absence using the Observation option to reinstate their previous license grade.
- Since 2005, Novice open wheel turnout has fluctuated between an average of 1.58 entries per race to 3.0 entries per race. The 2009 average is within this range, which suggests negligible impact from integration into Group 6.

Leo Mehl Joins Ross Bentley at 15th Annual Seminar

Leo Mehl, worldwide director of Goodyear Racing Tires for over 20 years (now retired), has agreed to share his stories and adventures in Formula I, NASCAR, and the world of racing tires with the NW racing community. One of the most popular guest speakers ever to speak at Armadillo Racing's annual High Performance Racing Seminar, Leo has agreed to leave his home in Akron, OH and fly all the way to the Puget Sound to share more of his experiences. He will be joined by Ross Bentley, accomplished race champion and top driving coach. Ross is the author of 6 "Speed Secrets" books on performance driving and racing.

"Already this seminar is shaping up to be the best ever," noted Andy Collins, President of Armadillo Racing. "We are continuing efforts with some fantastic people to get them to come and share their winning race secrets," Collins said recently. The event will consist of 4 or 5 primary speakers and, as an added benefit for this 15th year, a special evening bonus session will be conducted featuring all of the speakers plus a number of additional surprise guests you will not want to miss. Racers, crews and fans can be assured that this event is not to be missed as they will enhance their racing program with technical knowledge not available anywhere or from any book.

Here's what some previous attendees had to say about their experience: "I have been to all of Andy's seminars and consider it money well spent. It's always the start of my racing season and gets me off on the right foot." – Trout Roberts Crossle, CF ■ "Armadillo Racing is the racer's friend. The annual seminar is the best bargain around for learning about racing." – Dale Beuning, BMW ■ "There is always room for improvement and all the presenters provided information that would help any racer improve in all areas of racing. I'm glad I took notes." – Jack DeChristopher, Datsun 510 ■ "Thank you for gathering the talent to put together yet another interesting seminar toward the end result of making me a better or at least a more aware driver/mechanic." – Greg Miller, BMW E30 ■ "Great use of a day. Car prep can wait for driver prep. Very knowledgeable and good mix of stories and humor. I'm always learning, but today was a huge helping." – Jim Dewey, Porsche 911 ■ "I feel like I have had a tuneup and am more prepared to get ready for this race season. I have a whole new 'To Do' list as of today. Thanks." – Fred Wright Alfa 1750 GTV.

Registration opens November 1st with early bird bonuses. Don't miss out! Plan to attend this very special 15th annual event where the brightest minds in racing share their innermost secrets and lessons learned. February 13th, 2010 in Tacoma Washington. Complete details of the seminar will be posted at www.armadilloracing.com when they become available or you can call for details at 1-888-211-9129 (toll free USA and Canada). ■
